NLV has embarked on an ambitious quest to attain top tier research status – a designation that few universities in the United States hold, and one that UNLV is pursuing at full speed. UNLV’s top tier journey is a point of community pride, as university-fueled research has spurred major economic development, job creation and innovation in communities and regions across the country. UNLV’s efforts to increase its research capacity, as well as the commercialization of that research, is producing cutting edge scientific breakthroughs in which students, professors and scholars in residence are participating. Overall, it means tremendous economic potential for our region.

In 2016, UNLV’s Division of Research and Economic Development filed 61 patents and secured major partnerships with Fortune 500 companies, including Lockheed Martin on the NASA Orion project and other space exploration programs, and DuPont on an exciting microbiology research project. In the last year, licensing revenue to UNLV doubled from $126,000 in 2015 to $252,000 in 2016, and research awards increased by more than seven percent to nearly $34.5 million. As you’ll read in this month’s cover story, these projects – as well as several others – are garnering national and international recognition for UNLV, as well as providing the foundation for new businesses, industries, jobs and economic output in Southern Nevada.

High yielding research universities have contributed in significant ways to our national economy, as well. Since 1980, more than 5,000 startup companies have formed from U.S. universities. During that same time period, more than 3.8 million jobs were created as a result of university and nonprofit patent licensing during that time. In 2014 alone, nearly one thousand new products based on university discoveries were introduced to the market. Recent data show that University research has made an impact of more than $1 trillion on the U.S. gross industrial output from 1996 – 2013. These numbers support that we – as a business community – need to support UNLV’s research and commercialization efforts as they continue to gain momentum in local, national, and international circles.

After all, supporting UNLV’s research efforts gives support to our local university and is a point of community pride. But even more, it’s good business.

"...we – as a business community – need to support UNLV’s research and commercialization efforts as they continue to gain momentum in local, national, and international circles."

Chamber Members, Find out What’s Next at the Installation Luncheon!

Join the Metro Chamber as Bill Noonan, Senior Vice President of Industry and Governmental Affairs for Boyd Gaming, is sworn in as the chairman of the 2017 Board of Trustees. Noonan will share his vision for the Metro Chamber in 2017, as well as his insights on what’s in store for the Las Vegas business community for the coming year. This luncheon is a great opportunity to connect with Metro Chamber leadership and gain insight into what you, as a Metro Chamber member and stakeholder in the Southern Nevada community, can expect for the coming year. The luncheon is Thursday, December 8, at the Cosmopolitan, from 11:30 a.m. – 1:00 p.m. For more information or to purchase your tables or seats, visit LVChamber.com or call 702.641.5822.

Get the Facts: Marijuana Legalization Seminar Exclusively for Chamber Members

Question 2 on the Nevada ballot legalized the recreational use of marijuana, but what does it mean for your business, employees, and customers? Find out at an information-packed seminar Wednesday, December 14, from 3:30 – 5:00 p.m. at the Metro Chamber, presented by Mark J. Ricciardi, regional managing partner for Fisher Phillips’ Las Vegas office. Ricciardi is considered one of the top labor and employment lawyers in Southern Nevada, and has been advising businesses and agencies in labor and employment matters since 1987. Be sure to stay ahead of the curve and attend the seminar, exclusively available to Metro Chamber members. To register, visit LVChamber.com.

Reserve Your Booth to Put Your Brand on Blast

Preview Las Vegas is right around the corner, and there are several ways for you to get involved in the Southern Nevada business community’s premier conference and trade show. Preview is regarded as the place to get the business information you need to be successful in the coming year. Dynamic speakers, local economic experts, and industry leaders give you the tools and information you need to do business in Las Vegas. Attendees also have the opportunity to network with nearly 2,000 business professionals and executives, as well as connect with more than 100 exhibitors. Exhibit booths are available exclusively for Metro Chamber members in good standing. Exhibitors gain valuable brand exposure, generate new leads and business contacts, and renew business relationships. Preview Las Vegas will be held Tuesday, January 24, 2017, at the Thomas and Mack Center- Cox Pavilion, from 7:00 a.m. – 1:30 p.m. Tickets are on sale for $65 for Metro Chamber members and $85 for non-members. For more information, including ticket purchases and exhibitor registration, visit PreviewLasVegas.com or call 702.641.5822.

Last Chance! Prepay Your 2017 Dues

There is still one month left for Metro Chamber members to prepay their membership dues. By prepaying dues before December 31, 2016, members can get a head start on budgeting for 2017 and can take advantage of potential tax savings, as well as entered into a drawing for a free booth at Preview Las Vegas or a full-page ad in the Business Voice. A special event credit will also be given to any member prepaying their dues. Discounts are given for prepaying two or three-year memberships. For more information on prepaid dues or if you have not received your prepaid dues statement, contact the Metro Chamber accounting department at 702.641.5822.

U.S. District Court Blocks Overtime Rule

The U.S. District Court blocked the implementation of the new U.S. Department of Labor overtime rule that was scheduled to take effect on December 1, 2016. The Court preliminary enjoined the new rule that would have significantly changed the current overtime rates for exempted employees and would have affected all private sector employers, including small businesses, and nonprofits. The Metro Chamber strongly opposed the proposed administrative rule change that was being implemented by the Department of Labor, advocating against the proposed rule for more than a year beginning when it submitted a letter of opposition on September 4, 2015, and during its annual trips to Washington, D.C. The Chamber also urged its members to contact their representatives to block its implementation. Additionally, the Metro Chamber was an early supporter of Nevada Attorney General Adam Laxalt leading a coalition of 21 states in filing the lawsuit challenging the new rule.

“This is an important ruling that benefits private and non-profit sector employers in all of Nevada, and the country as well. Preventing the overtime rule from taking effect was the number one priority when the Metro Chamber was in Washington, D.C. talking to federal legislators, and the Chamber has continuously opposed the rule by way of its advocacy efforts ever since it was proposed. We are pleased that the overtime rule is preliminarily enjoined and that employers will not have to implement the dramatic and burdensome increases in labor costs as of December 1,” said Kristin McMillan, president and CEO of the Metro Chamber.

IRS Reminds Employers of New January 31 Filing Deadline

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) issued a reminder to small businesses and employers of a new filing date of January 31, for W-2 forms. The Protecting Americans from Tax Hikes (PATH) Act, enacted last December, includes a new requirement for employers. They are now required to file their copies of Form W-2, submitted to the Social Security Administration, by January 31. The new deadline also applies to certain Forms 1099-MISC reporting non-employee compensation. In the past, employers typically had until the end of February, if filing on paper, or the end of March, if filing electronically, to submit their copies of these forms. The goal of this new federal law is aimed at making it easier for the IRS to detect and prevent tax refund fraud. For more information on the new filing deadline, contact the IRS at irs.gov or consult with your financial planner, tax preparer, or payroll service.

Save the Date: North Las Vegas State of the City Address

The North Las Vegas State of the City address will take place Thursday, January 26, from 11:30 a.m. - 1:30 p.m., at Aliante Hotel and Casino. Mayor John Lee will outline his vision for the City of North Las Vegas in 2017 and touch upon the achievements of the city from last year. The Metro Chamber is proud to partner with the City of North Las Vegas for this annual event. For more information, visit cityofnorthlasvegas.com.
SBA Sets New Small Business Lending Records

The U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) announced the lending numbers for fiscal year 2016, which indicated record levels of small business lending through the 7(a) and 504 loan programs. The numbers also displayed a significant increase in lending to women, veterans, and underserved communities. During FY 2016, the SBA approved more than 70,000 loans in the 7(a) and 504 programs, which provided $28.9 billion to small businesses and supported nearly 694,000 jobs. Minority business owners received a record combined $8.65 billion in 7(a) and 504-approved lending, and for the fifth consecutive year, 7(a) lending to women entrepreneurs also increased in dollar and volume, with nearly $7.3 billion loaned. For more information, visit sba.gov.

National Small Business Week Applications Now Open

Are you a small business owner with an amazing success story to tell? If so, you can submit your nomination today for the 2017 National Small Business Week Awards. Since 1963, the President of the United States has issued a proclamation announcing National Small Business Week, which recognizes the critical contributions of America’s entrepreneurs and small business owners. As part of National Small Business Week, the U.S. Small Business Administration takes the opportunity to highlight the impact of outstanding entrepreneurs and small business owners throughout the United States. All nominations must be mailed or hand delivered to the nearest SBA office no later than 3:00 p.m. ET on January 10, 2017. For more information, visit sba.gov/nsbw.

for Nevada.

Let’s talk about a brighter future.

At Valley Electric Association, we are on the forefront of technological innovation as a part of our mission to improve efficiency and service within our industry. It goes beyond online payments and advanced utility management tools for our members. We also have one of the largest domestic solar water heating programs in the nation, and we’re leading the way in leveraging renewable energy contracts and providing service to people as far away as California. That means more jobs. More progress. And more advancement for Nevada, and for you.

Together, we’re doing powerful things.

The Metro Chamber, in partnership with the Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority, celebrated a year of record-breaking nominations for front-line employees throughout the Valley that make our city such a dynamic place to live, work, and visit. JJ Snyder of KTNV Channel 13’s Morning Blend emceed a high-energy program that included live entertainment from the Australian BeeGees and the recognition of Jazz Woodward from the Downtown Grand as the Customer Service Excellence Person of the Year.
Metro Chamber Board Member Receives National Recognition for Community Service

Tyler Corder, CFO and COO of Findlay Automotive Group and Metro Chamber Board Trustee, has been nominated for the 2017 TIME Dealer of the Year Award. He is one of a group of 49 dealer nominees from 16,000 across the United States to be honored at the annual National Automotive Dealers Association Convention in New Orleans in January. Corder was selected to represent the Nevada Franchised Auto Dealers Association in the national competition.

Corder’s legacy of community service and stewardship stems from a broad array of community organizations with missions to serve different needs within the community. His first board role was with Safe Nest, a local domestic violence advocacy and healing organization, and he has gone on to significant leadership roles with the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society, American Red Cross of Southern Nevada, the Foundation for an Independent Tomorrow, and the American Heart Association, as well as the Metro Chamber and the Southern Nevada Sports Hall of Fame Foundation.

He and the Findlay Automotive Group have also helped other organizations receive publicity and brand recognition for their efforts through partnerships with different media outlets, including the Findlay Community Spotlight on channel 8 in partnership with Cox and Fox 5’s Celebrity Spin Zone, which features a new non-profit organization every month. Supporting the community is part of the culture at Findlay Automotive, Corder explains. It helps them reach audiences, create a rapport within the community, and has helped bolster the organization’s reputation as a trustworthy, community-focused organization. Aside from a generous corporate giving structure, Corder says the organization continually asks itself, “What else can we do?”

Corder’s advice to young professionals and those looking to deepen their engagement within the community is to invest in a cause that interests them, or one to which they have a personal connection. He encourages them to volunteer and serve on committees, which gives organizations an introduction into their time commitment and what they can bring to the board. “You have to put yourself out there,” he says, “and then stick with it.”

The Metro Chamber is proud to have Tyler Corder on its Board of Trustees, and encourages members to get involved through its councils and committees, as well as seek out volunteer opportunities through Metro Chamber member nonprofit organizations. Find more than 60 nonprofit members online at LVChamber.com, on the Metro Chamber’s business directory. For more information on volunteering with the Chamber, contact the membership team at 702.641.5822.

"WHAT ELSE CAN WE DO?"

"...invest in a cause that interests [you], or one to which [you] have a personal connection."
Las Vegas Metro Chamber of Commerce members played an important role in the outcome of this year’s election. You sent a clear message that employers are invested in Nevada’s election process and care about public policy that is developed in our community. You helped ensure that a large number of business-friendly candidates were elected this week to the State Legislature, Clark County Commission, and several education boards. Nevada’s employers are committed to preserving Nevada’s pro-business environment, which is critical to the future prosperity of Nevada. As a result, the Metro Chamber’s win rate for the 2016 Election Cycle is 88 percent. This is an impressive win rate. Thank you for all of your support and engagement that demonstrates that there is Strength in Numbers!

Congratulations to the following list of Chamber-endorsed candidates who were elected to serve our community. This list reflects a broad base of individuals who understand the needs of employers, support job creation, and are committed to a more prosperous future. The Metro Chamber looks forward to working with you with the objective of building a stronger and more prosperous Nevada for our employers and employees.

Also in regards to Ballot Question 5, Metro Chamber President and CEO Kristin McMillan issued the following statement, “The Las Vegas Metro Chamber thanks voters for renewing Fuel Revenue Indexing for 10 years in order to fund transportation projects in our region. By approving Ballot Question 5, Clark County voters have demonstrated their strong support of the transportation infrastructure improvements that are necessary for economic growth, and will also lead to improved road safety and the creation of thousands of good jobs in our community.”

For more information on the Metro Chamber’s endorsed candidates, visit LVChamber.com or call the government affairs team at 702.641.5822. To make a contribution to BizPAC, the Metro Chamber’s bipartisan political action committee, visit LVChamber.com or contact Maisie Rodolico at 702.586.3846.
Congratulations to the 24 honorees of this year’s Business Excellence Awards, sponsored exclusively by Nevada State Bank. At this year’s celebratory luncheon at MGM Grand, honorees received podium honors and Congressional certificates to honor their achievements in the community. In addition, six businesses celebrating milestone membership anniversaries with the Chamber were also recognized for their ongoing support of the business community. For more information or a complete list of honorees, visit LVChamber.com.
In 1965, University of Florida’s assistant football coach Dwayne Douglas posed a question to a physician at the university: why were so many of his players affected by heat, heat-related illnesses, and sudden weight loss during games? Dr. Robert Cade and his colleagues got to work at the university, testing football players and various hypotheses until they discovered two major factors in the decline of stamina and performance of the Gators: loss of fluids and electrolytes through sweat not getting replaced, and carbohydrate loss during physical activity that just wasn’t getting replenished.

Their solution was a carefully balanced, scientifically formulated carbohydrate-electrolyte beverage to replace those lost by the Gators during play. The end result was Gatorade. The product sold to PepsiCo, and yields the university about $12 million a year from its 20 percent share of trademark royalties, totaling more than $250 million over the lifetime of the agreement thus far.

The development, testing, and commercialization of intellectual property by universities has yielded significant and life-changing discoveries, including Perceptive Pixel (the developer of the touch-screen map used in many national cable news networks’ election coverage) at New York University, a virtual endoscopy machine developed at Wake Forest University in North Carolina now licensed to GE Medical, and Somavert, a drug produced by Pfizer that counteracts the effects of the body’s overproduction of growth hormones, at Ohio University. On a local level, however, this type of research yields economic benefits, from high-paying jobs to commercial space, and the perpetuation of economic activity to the university and the communities in which they are located.

These types of intellectual property are significant revenue drivers for universities, helping to fuel more research and involvement and continue to churn these developments in science, medicine, and technology. Collaborations between students, professors, visiting scholars, and the community have advanced these breakthroughs, giving rise to solving real-world problems in pragmatic and precise ways - a win-win situation for communities, universities, and society.
UNLV, over the last few years, has been actively developing its tech transfer and commercialization arm, with some major partnerships under its belt. UNLV’s Division of Research and Economic Development filed 61 patents in 2016 and secured partnerships with major Fortune 500 companies and organizations, including Lockheed Martin, DuPont, and NASA. Its office of economic development has identified several expertise clusters, including energy and the environment, infrastructure and technology, business and hotel administration, health, and education, that pinpoint areas of particular interest to the region and community and help solve real-world challenges.

In addition to these exciting scientific study areas, a robust and dynamic research center is one of the key components to propelling UNLV to a top tier university for research, and will most certainly be a linchpin as it seeks out the Carnegie Tier One designation in the next few years. A strong research sector also helps attract top talent from around the world, in terms of students, faculty, visiting scholars, and other special projects. Top tier universities attract research projects from some of the world’s most cutting edge industries and brands, as well, and UNLV is no exception. To help with that goal, UNLV launched an aggressive plan to increase research spending to $150 million per year by 2025, nearly quadruple the $40 million a year it currently spends (less than pre-recession levels of $54 million, but in its fourth year of increased research spending).

The numbers from fiscal year 2015 demonstrate the dynamism of UNLV’s growth as a research

Institution. Research and economic development activities increased for the fourth consecutive year, and research awards increased by more than seven percent to nearly $34.5 million. Proposals also increased by two percent. Licensing revenue doubled from $126,000 in FY 2015 to more than $252,000 in FY 2016. Another critical metric for research institutions, especially those competing in top tier educational environments, is the number of doctoral degrees conferred, as these degrees require a strong research component. In FY 2016, 166 were conferred, an increase of nearly 13 percent from 2015.

These consistent upticks signify the continued momentum of the research produced and UNLV’s overall research capacity.

In October, UNLV and Lockheed Martin entered into a commercially sponsored master agreement to support UNLV faculty and student work on NASA’s Orion program and other Lockheed Martin space exploration projects. “This agreement with Lockheed Martin is exciting not just because it supports the development of our faculty and student innovations; there is also the intention to see these innovations applied more broadly,” said Zach Miles, UNLV’s associate vice president for economic development. The collaboration, spanning five years, will provide UNLV with up to $5 million in funding to UNLV’s Howard R. Hughes College of Engineering through task orders commissioning work related to space exploration. This exciting train of research will give students the ability to work on some of the most cutting edge engineering projects in the research market today. Rama Venkat, dean of the College of Engineering, says, “This partnership will provide unique opportunities for our students to enhance their knowledge and research capabilities in exciting new areas and help accelerate the efforts of Lockheed Martin research activities and the nation’s ambitious space program.”

Sponsored research is taking place on several levels at UNLV. DuPont Industrial Biosciences is sponsoring UNLV microbiologist Brian Hedlund to research various microbes and their biological functions, primarily to find bacteria with enzymes that can particularly withstand high temperatures, such as those found in geothermal hot springs in Northern Nevada. The commercial and scientific applications for such research include materials that could degrade plastics, development of disease diagnostics and prophylactic drugs, and the development of biofuel technologies. UNLV students will also take part in the project, giving them hands-on access to this cutting edge sponsored research.

Sponsored research is just one facet of UNLV’s diverse research and economic development programming. Businesses can partner with UNLV to address challenges within their industries or businesses through industry-sponsored research. It is working to expand its scope of public-private partnerships to actively address some of the region’s biggest challenges through mutually beneficial projects. The university’s Office of Economic Development maintains a list of available technologies, and is available for assistance and inquiries regarding faculty expertise and research interests.

Yet another arm of UNLV’s economic development office is tech transfer and development of intellectual property. Individuals interested in bringing their intellectual property to the marketplace can contact the office to vet the idea and research, as well as evaluate its viability in the marketplace. The office can assist with patenting the product once vetted, create business plans, and obtain copyrights and protections for the intellectual property. The Small Business Development Center (with several branches) helps with financing, licensing, and other necessary steps, as well.

With valuable public-private partnerships continuing to build and the caliber of research yielding quantifiable and real applications, UNLV is well on its way to reaching top tier status and taking the lead on addressing substantial challenges and issues that affect us on a local, regional, and global level.

Put your expertise and resources to work to assist UNLV’s tech transfer program. Here are a few ways for you or your company to get engaged with the UNLV Office of Research and Economic Development:

- Serve in an advisory or support role, or as a subject matter expert for a specific piece of research conducted at UNLV.
- Fund a research project, or part of one, that may have an impact on your business or a field of study about which you are passionate.
- Volunteer through the Technology Assessment Committee, where engaged members of the business community help vet ideas and apply practical and commercial usage strategies to them.
- Participate in the annual UNLV Research Week each October to celebrate the research initiatives and accomplishments of the faculty and students.

For more information on how you or your company can get involved, visit unlv.edu/research.
right lights, world class hotels, shows and entertainment for all. Nevada is recognized for the tourism, gaming, and entertainment that dominates Las Vegas. However, there are many smaller industries flourishing, as well. In fact, Nevada has a unique business environment that attracts small and family-owned businesses. For this reason, the “what happens in Vegas stays in Vegas,” slogan may be aptly applied to businesses and personal wealth in the state of Nevada as a whole, by virtue of its favorable trust, asset-protection, and income-tax laws.

Nevada is an attractive destination for new businesses, as well as for legacy businesses where succession planning is a motivating factor. Whether the current goal is income-tax efficiency, asset protection, or transitioning to future generations of the family, business owners should be aware of the protections and planning strategies available to them under Nevada law:

IRREVOCABLE TRUSTS

An irrevocable trust, generally speaking, cannot be terminated or modified after it is funded. In other jurisdictions, once a business owner transfers company interests into an irrevocable trust, they typically no longer benefit from ownership of the transferred assets or from the trust at all. However, Nevada trusts may be structured to benefit the individual(s) creating and transferring assets to the trust. Residents of Nevada, and non-residents who utilize a Nevada trustee, may avail themselves of the protections afforded by these self-settled trusts.

CREDIT PROTECTION LAWS

In addition to Nevada’s lack of state income tax, its creditor protection laws as applied to transfers to trusts currently make it one of the most attractive jurisdictions in the United States for asset protection trust planning. Nevada imposes only a two-year statute of limitations on most transfers made to trusts, and no affidavit is required by the transferor with regard to solvency after a transfer is made. Moreover, there are no exceptions to Nevada’s spendthrift statute for spouses, children, pre-existing or future creditors, or anyone at all, after the statute of limitations expires.

LEGACY TRUST PLANNING

Certain trusts are created to transfer business ownership to the next generation and beyond. Under the laws of many states, trusts must be abolished and trust assets distributed no later than 90 years after creation, or in other states, upon the death of a grandchild. In such states, trust assets are then forced back into the income tax base and taxable estates of trust beneficiaries and any asset protection provided by the trust is lost. These distributions are often also subject to the generation-skipping transfer tax, currently imposed at a 40 percent rate.

Contrast this with trusts administered in Nevada that may exist for 365 years. What happens in Nevada stays in Nevada!

Business succession planning takes time to develop. Business owners should consider the unique planning opportunities available in Nevada and discuss them with their tax and legal advisors, even if they don’t have plans to sell or transfer a business for many years to come. Having a plan in place can protect you - and your heirs - from future unforeseen circumstances and can provide peace of mind while you continue to work and grow your business ... under the bright lights of Las Vegas and Nevada.

The holidays are almost upon us, and for retailers, ‘tis the season to hire extra help.

Because finding seasonal help can often present challenges, some employers choose to use employment agencies as a means of bolstering its workforce, rather than going through a lengthy interview process or spending money advertising for temporary positions. This arrangement has been an efficient way for the retail industry to manage typical business fluctuation during the holidays. But two recent decisions from the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) have made the practice of retaining temporary workers more ambiguous, especially in franchise situations.

Last year, the NLRB revised the standards for deciding if two entities could be considered employers for the same group of people, also known as joint employment. This is a concept that affects temp workers and franchise retailers and has raised meaningful concerns regarding whether the NLRB plans to force more retailers to bargain with unions. Such concerns are well justified because we have seen an increase in NLRB charges filed against franchises in which joint employer issues are raised.

In that decision, the NLRB overturned board precedent that basically prevented a temporary employment agency and the company using the temporary employees from being treated as employers of the same group of employees.

These two decisions signify a monumental shift in determining joint employment under the National Labor Relations Act and unquestionably make it easier for unions to become the exclusive representative of individuals working for multiple employers. If such representation is achieved, then both “employers” will be required to bargain the employees’ terms and conditions of employment with the union.

It’s easy to see how two separate employers could face challenges in negotiating a single labor contract. The practice also exposes employers to more risk and liability for unfair labor practices.

In the grand scheme of things, these recent NLRB decisions will lead many business owners to question hiring temporary employees. This may also force companies to directly employ the supplementary workforce instead of turning to a staffing company.

Due to the shifting landscape of joint employment, companies should review their current relationships with temporary staffing companies to determine if they could be viewed as a joint employer and be drawn into a union election by using temporary employees.

Irrespective of their findings, the practicalities of these affairs in the contemporary economic climate will make it hard to circumvent all potential risk. That is because the NLRB could find a joint employer relationship if a retailer and staffing company both have the right to indirectly determine matters governing the essential terms and conditions of employment. This includes the right, even if not exercised, to control employees by rejecting them or discontinuing use of assigned employees.

While businesses must weigh the necessity of using temporary employees against the risks of doing so, it could be advantageous for some companies to have conversations with their vendors on developing and putting into effect traditional union-free approaches with respect to the non-traditional workforce. If the staffing agency heeds the concerns of its employees and responds appropriately, the prospect that the staffing company personnel will pursue third-party representation diminishes.

The College of Southern Nevada recently debuted a new, state-of-the-art business laboratory that is intended to help students learn to compete in the international high-pressure business environment.

The new Interactive Business Lab on the College's North Las Vegas Campus has been in the works for several years now. It features technology that will allow faculty to create simulations of the real business world. Students will be able to work with teams and groups, participate in international discussions via videoconferencing, and share information electronically in real-time with one another.

“One of the unique features is it's a completely wireless environment,” said Clarissa Cota, chair of the Business Administration Department. She explained that each student will be provided with a tablet that will allow them to be connected to one another, as well as to the large video screens placed throughout the room.

Start-up funding was provided by a federal Perkins Grant through the Department of Education. Other funds were provided by CSN, and much help came in from the community, including the technology companies Ideabox and Crestron. But the idea was hatched long before building started.

To explore how the college could offer the best education to its students possible, we sent faculty to visit Stanford University, which has a similar space for business students. They took that elite university’s idea, modified it specifically to fit the needs of CSN’s students, and went about reworking an existing classroom.

With the cooperation of many departments at the college, including the Facilities Department and the Office of Technology Services, the classroom was completely remodeled. In addition to the wireless technology and video screens, it also features mobile seating and moveable dividers to allow the creation of a “virtual conference room.”

The College expects that several different types of courses will be held in the new laboratory, including introductory business classes, marketing and management courses, and possibly meetings of various college interest groups.

Cota said the laboratory will be watched closely and modified, as needed.

“The space itself allows for a variety of teaching techniques and methods to be utilized,” she said. “And the best part is that it is adaptable as our needs and technology changes.”

For more information on the College of Southern Nevada’s new laboratory, visit csn.edu.

2017 is moments away. As with years past, the top of each New Year marks a new beginning. As Antoine de Saint-Exupery prophetically said; “A goal without a plan is just a wish.” Now is the time to start preparing for your success.

As we outline some goals for the upcoming year, let’s start with a personal challenge to grow your resume by adding some additional honors that will help you stand out to a recruiting agent. These should be measurable milestones you can use to outline your skills. Crush a sales goal, get certified in (another) specific skill that can bring added value to your position and your company, or get that esteemed “employee of the month/year” title. Remember, this is a critical opportunity to highlight your skills and how they could be applied practically to the company’s benefit.

I’ve mentored many entrepreneurs and employees on the soft skills needed to be successful in the marketplace. One of the most common questions I get when on the topic of resumes is, “Which format do I need to use – chronological, functional, combination, or targeted?” With each passing year, the consensus changes. The most widely used is chronological, but it is suggested you write to your audience and industry.

I personally favor the combination format and have two versions - a graphic edition (well, I am in marketing) with lots of colors, graphs, and eye-catching graphics (including my photo), and a standard text-only version, which focuses on key-word specific headlines and language. The first is ideal when it is being handed to the hiring manager in person, the latter option is best used when uploading your resume to medium and large companies that use software programs to sift through thousands of resumes. It’s important to mirror your language to that in the job posting. The more relevant your keywords are to the job posting, the higher your chances of getting a callback.

If you need help organizing your resume, The One Stop Career Center in Las Vegas is a great free resource to help you with writing the perfect resume. You can reach them at nvcareercenter.org/.

Understandably, not everyone is vying for his or her dream job. Perhaps you are already with a company that you love. No matter what side of the preverbal table you are on, let’s spend a few minutes getting Q-1 of 2017 organized to set the tone for the year.
Have a plan. Set short and long term goals for the year.
Whether you’re a start-up or an existing enterprise, nothing will lend to your success more than a business plan. Most entrepreneurs shy away from this critical step because they are intimidated by the process or don’t know where to start. The first step is to outsource the task (see systems below) and let someone more experienced to do the heavy lifting so you can focus on your business. Your job is to manage the content and make sure your vision comes through.

- Contact your local university or college and seek help from professors/students in the business school.
- Hire a virtual assistant to help. This is a great way to get your business plan done professionally and very inexpensively.
- Work with a consulting company.
- Download a business plan template online.
- Set monthly, quarterly, and yearly goals, and track progress along the way.

Focus on task and time management.
“NOT-to do lists are often more effective than to-do lists for upgrading performance.” – Tim Ferris, 4 Hour Work Week
We are all guilty of boasting in accomplishment after a long day of checking off items on our “to-do” list. Often times these items are low priority, time consuming tasks that aren’t generating income. Focus your energy on two or three critical income generating tasks per day. All other tasks should be delegated to an assistant or employee.

Avoid distractions. Regain your most valuable asset (time) with helpful online tools like toodledo.com and rescuetime.com.

Systems! Systems! Systems!
Behind every successful business is an intricate network of systems. Notice I said systems, not people. People can be unreliable, expensive, and replaceable, regardless of skill set or education level. A successful business must rely on as many automated and low management systems as possible to operate efficiently and with minimal effort. These can include sales and marketing funnels, instructional videos and trainings, inventory management, employee handbooks and HR materials, and social media management (such as Hootsuite.com).

Train for a marathon.
Just as a runner is prepping for a marathon he has one goal in mind: speed. Practice and proficiency nets speed and efficiency. Train yourself to maximize each work hour and get more done next hour than you did the previous.

Get involved in the community.
I am a firm believer and advocate of being a servant leader and enriching the community by volunteering and mentoring. Volunteering should always be at the top of your planning list. Not only does it shed a philanthropic light on your brand, you walk away positively impacting your community, fostering new relationships, mentoring future leaders, and helping those less fortunate. Join VYP’s Community Outreach Program to get involved.

Vegas Young Professionals is an organization committed to supporting those in our community willing to take risks and pioneer innovation. We are a group of like-minded individuals with the dream to do more. I’m happy to share any insight and encouragement with you or if you have any questions on how to get started or want to share your success story, email me at Marketing@VegasYP.com.
In November, the Metro Chamber gave thanks to businesses and individuals that make Southern Nevada such a vibrant place to live, work, and visit. Through programs like the annual Business Excellence Awards Luncheon and the Customer Service Excellence Luncheon, the Metro Chamber and its partners recognized outstanding organizations and people. In addition, the Metro Chamber continued to provide valuable products and services to its members. Here are just a few ways the Metro Chamber helped its members in November:

- Championed the business community during the 2016 General Election, where Chamber-endorsed candidates had an 88 percent win rate and Question 5, renewing fuel revenue indexing, passed to allow Southern Nevada to invest in critical infrastructure improvements and projects.

- Celebrated the diversity and creativity of the local business community during the Business Excellence Awards, sponsored exclusively by Nevada State Bank, honoring 24 outstanding businesses, as well as six longtime Chamber members celebrating milestone membership anniversaries with Legacy Awards, at MGM Grand Conference Center.

- Held a special post-election Paul Call featuring The Honorable Jon Porter and Fennemore Craig Of Counsel Jesse Wadhams discussing the effect the election results will have on Nevada businesses.

- Recognized outstanding customer service stars with the Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority at the Customer Service Excellence Luncheon inside The Orleans Hotel and Casino, including the announcement of the 2016 Customer Service Excellence Person of the Year, Jazz Woodward with the Downtown Grand.

- Mingled with Vegas Young Professionals members during the last VYP Fusion Mixer of the year, inside Montecristo Cigar Bar’s state-of-the-art venue at Caesars Palace.

- Connected with fellow Chamber members and dined at Downtown Summerlin’s newest restaurants during the debut of the Networking Power Lunch.

- Heard from Justin Weniger, the CEO of the Life is Beautiful festival, during Vegas Young Professionals Bigwig Lunch Time series.

- Championed the Las Vegas small business community by acting as a hub for small businesses to receive promotional materials for their storefronts for Small Business Saturday on November 26.

- Informed members about the Department of Labor Overtime regulations and discussed opportunities for businesses to grow their capital during the Chamber University webinar series.
